Everyone who enjoys being genuinely amused is eagerly anticipating "Seven Days," the Country club play to be given at the Elks theatre, Thursday and Friday evening. That Phoenix people like to laugh has been evidenced the past few days since the ticket sale opened. Practically all the pretty girls in town are selling tickets and they are having no trouble in disposing of them. They may be exchanged for reserved seats Tuesday morning at the central Pharmacy. Vice President Thomas R. Marshall and Mrs. Marshall have signified their intention of attending and will occupy a box on Thursday evening. The other boxes have been reserved by President Gordon Tweed and chairman of the house committee William G. Hartranft of the Country club, M. Geo. A. Olney and Burry Goldwater. There is no doubt but that there will be two record breaking houses for each performance and there should be.

It is just the type of play that appeals to the public. Its action is snappy, its lines scintillating and if it goes as well on the opening night as it is going at rehearsals its success is assured. There are the favorites of last year, clever little Miss Ruth Griffin, lovely Miss Ruth Alsworth who was charming in "Christopher Jr." and Irving de R. Miller and Judge Edward Kent who also won fame as amateur actors in the same play. Mrs. Arthur Beeger will make her first appearance as will Mrs. Horace Knowles and both read their lines splendidly. Alexander Baker shows remarkable ability and while Mr. Baker is not at all ambitious to be a matinee idol he will have difficulty in avoiding it, his only chance of escape being in Hugh Marshall, who is a genius in his part. Power Conway and Ernest Bennett will have their quota of admirers and if anyone loves a fat man, there's C. P. Morton. And the cast, in the meantime—a morning rehearsal at afternoon at the theatre and in the evening the third rehearsal for the day. "It's nothing to do 'til tomorrow" existence for Director Maitland Davies and his company of players.

Mrs. J. C. Monihan and Miss Anna Monihan will give a musical Thursday afternoon at the Woman's club that will take precedence over any event of spring. The program is a fascinating one, a number of favorite artists contributing to make it attractive. Elaine Canon is to play: Pastoral et Varie (1756-1791).

Scherzo-E flat minor (1756-1791). Nocturne, Op. 9, No. 2 Chopin. Ballade G minor. Chopin. Katherine Wisner McCluskey will read Mary Stuart Cuttings' "A Good Dinner" in her inimitable manner and Maitland Davies under whose direction the entire program will be given will add greatly to the pleasure of the event by singing two groups of songs. He will sing: "Where My Caravan has Rested," and "The Magpie" from Romancing songs and the Flower Song from Carmen and a group of "little songs."
